<ul style="list-style-type: none"> ● Keep a written record of all bullying incidents that your child reports to you, Record the names of the children involved, where and when the bullying occurred, and what happened. ● Immediately ask to meet with your child’s teacher or guidance counselor. Explain your concerns in a friendly, non-confrontational way. ● Ask the teacher or guidance counselor about his or her observations. Has he/she noticed or suspected bullying? How is your child getting along with others in class? Has he/she noticed that your child is being isolated, excluded from activities with students? Ask the teacher or guidance counselor what he/she intends to do to investigate and help to stop the bullying. ● Relieve the stress. If you are concerned about how your child is coping with the stress of being bullied, ask to speak with your child’s guidance counselor or other school-based mental health professional. ● Set up a follow-up appointment with the teacher or guidance counselor to discuss progress. If there is no improvement after reporting bullying to your child’s teacher, speak with the school principal.. Keep notes. Keep an organized file of notes from your meetings with teachers and administrators. ● If bullying continues, write to the school’s principal or administrator and include evidence from your notes to back up your complaint. Putting a complaint in writing is important so there is a record of your concern. ● Give the school reasonable time to investigate and hear both sides of the story. ● Please remember that school officials will not be able to give you details on the punishment of other students in compliance with FERPA, but rest assured that the above rubric will be followed in every circumstance.
